Call for Papers

We are always soliciting contributions for future issues of this journal. Contributions are accepted from all undergraduate students who have worked on a mathematical topic beyond the classroom. Appropriate papers from other departments and other institutions are welcome.

If you have recently completed a thesis, worked on an interesting mathematical project, or would like to share your internship experience, please consider writing an article for this journal.

To submit an article, please forward your material in electronic form (Microsoft Word or LaTeX) to any member of the editorial board. Articles should be about 10 pages in length and thesis abstracts should be limited to 2 pages. Review and selection of articles is handled by the editorial committee. Editorial changes of accepted articles are communicated through students' advisors.
