Gunnar Lund is a sophomore at Boston College studying Philosophy and Linguistics. His main interests are Philosophy of Mathematics, Feminism, and Critical Race Theory. Gunnar hopes to eventually pursue a Ph.D. in Philosophy or Linguistics. Currently, he is the music director of WZBC 90.3, Boston College’s student-run radio station.
Kristianne C. Anor is a third year undergraduate student at York University, CAN, currently completing her Specialized Honours BA in Anthropology. Upon completion of her undergraduate studies, she hopes to pursue her M.Sc. and eventually attend medical school to become a pediatrician. Her major philosophical interests include Philosophy of Science and Bioethics. She enjoys writing satirically humorous articles on culture, fashion, and everyday life in her spare time.

Kyle Cavagnini is a sophomore at the University of North Carolina at Asheville, where he is working towards a degree in Biochemistry with minors in Philosophy, Mathematics, and Neuroscience. His primary philosophical interests are in Philosophy of Science, Mind, and Contemporary Pragmatism. After completing his undergraduate degree, Kyle plans to pursue a Ph.D. in Molecular and Chemical Biology. When he is able to get out of the research lab, Kyle enjoys playing bass clarinet with campus ensembles and with the Blue Ridge Orchestra.

Amanda Frankel is a senior at Seton Hall University triple majoring in Political Science, Philosophy, and Classics. She is philosophically inclined towards Camusian Existentialism. Her immediate goal is to graduate (mostly unscathed) with high honors and work with think tanks. Amanda is roughly twelve books away from owning everything Jack Kerouac has ever written.
Garrett Allen is a Philosophy major at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. His philosophical interests are in Ancient Philosophy, especially Plato, and Epistemology. Allen’s professional goals include continuing to study philosophy and graduate school. He spent the spring semester of 2012 studying in Berlin, Germany.

Phillip Curtsmith is a senior Philosophy student at Western Connecticut State University. His philosophic interest is metaphysics alone, recognizing the necessity and virtue of metaphysical foundation in any philosophic system. Phillip plans to complete a Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology and continue philanthropic work alongside the Connecticut Philosophical Society, which he co-founded.

Vincent Charles Sawaya is an undergraduate student at Michigan State University majoring in Philosophy and Arts and Humanities. His academic interests center on issues of basic human rights, distributive justice, civic engagement, and the tension between the ideals of democracy and the ideals of capitalism. In the fall of 2012, Vincent will be teaching in Detroit, Michigan through Teach For America. He plans on attending graduate school focusing on the relationship between philosophy of education, existentialism, and social political philosophy.
Debra Bellamy is a Philosophy major at Goucher College. Her philosophical interests include Feminist Philosophy, Queer Theory, French Post-Structuralism, Asian Thought, and Philosophy of Science. Before entering graduate school in the fall of 2013 to study Continental Philosophy she intends to travel, attend conferences, and publish. She is opposed to using electronic books: “Give me hard copies or give me death!”

Hannah Laurens is in her final year of the BA in Philosophy at Birkbeck College, London. She loves Spinoza and Aristotle, and plans to continue her studies at the Masters level. Besides doing Philosophy, Hannah is currently producing a pop album and hopes to release it in the near future.

Peter Antich has lived for twenty-two years in the sprawling Dallas suburbs of North Texas, and currently attends the University of Dallas majoring in Philosophy, with a concentration in Classical Greek. Peter’s general areas of interest are continental and ancient Greek Philosophy. He intends to enter a Ph.D. in Philosophy program in Fall, 2012.